STRANGE TALE OF "SPIRIT WALK" AT DESERTED CAMP OF STIMLER

Charles A. Woodruff, manager of the Chicago-Woodruff property about two miles west of Goldfield, made a trip to the Stimler district Tuesday, accompanied by Fred L. Miner. Mr. Woodruff represents some Chicago people who are now having assessment and development work done on a group of fifteen claims, most of which were originally located by Harry Stimler and partners. Outside of this work there is little development going on in the district, which was the scene of a very lively boom a few years ago. The district is located ten miles southwest of Blair.

Stimler discovered some very rich gold bearing ore at surface, and soon there was a great rush to the district. Leases were eagerly taken and at one time there were thirty-seven shafts in operation along the big dike on which Stimler made his discovery. Considerable good ore was shipped from several of these shafts, but they soon got down into a zone where the vein was badly leached, the pay values disappeared and an exodus began, which within a short time left the camp entirely deserted. The shafts range from 0 to 200 feet deep but it is believed that additional depth will open a sulphide zone, where the leached values will be found re-deposited.

The district shows strong volcanic action and thousands of acres are thickly strewn on the surface with chunks of lava and boulders ranging in size from small to ten and fifteen feet in diameter, some almost as round as a marble and others of freakish shape and showing large cavities formed in the cooling process.

One of the interesting sights of the camp is a tunnel driven in the boom days by a spiritualist, whose name has been lost from the archives of the historian, but whose work still stands as a monument to the faith that some people have in "spooks."

Up on the steep mountain side this tunnel has been driven into the hill about 125 feet. The spiritualist, who was a long and lanky fellow, came into the camp during the boom, announced that he had been directed there by a certain spirit with which he daily communed, picked out the identical spot where he was directed to dig and began operations under a lease. Whenever he used up what money he had, he would go to work for some other leaser, replenish his exchequer, and then resume operations on his tunnel, which the scoffers dubbed the "spirit walk."

The tunnel floor and the top of the dump are as level and smooth as a cement walk. Several times a day they were sacredly swept with a broom made out of a big bunch of willows tied together, and the place was kept scrupulously clean so that the spirits would not soil their feet when they came to the tunnel to hold communion. The top of the dump was raked each day with a home-made rake in which nails had been used as teeth, and a broad trail was extended out along the mountain about 150 feet, which was given the same scrupulous attention as the dump and tunnel.

Extending from the outer end of the trail, on the lower side, and running to the lower edge of the dump on the other side of the tunnel, is what is supposed to be a "spirit" telephone line constructed out of baling wire, with stakes about three feet high for poles. Running into the tunnel, but not connected with the other, is another "telephone" line of the same material. No vulgar wheelbarrow ever desecrated the place, all of the rock being carried out of the tunnel in candle boxes.

Ore running $5 and $6 a ton was opened in a vein cut in the heading of the tunnel; the faithful worker kept on with renewed energy for a few months. Then he got another "tip" from his guardian "spook."

The communication came about 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, and commanded him to go to Australia. Abandoning his tunnel, tools and camp, he went to one of the leasers who still owed him for some work, asked him for the money that was due, received it, and within an hour had struck across the hills for Blair.

He arrived there late in the afternoon and announced his intention of walking to Blair Junction, about twenty miles away, that night. People who tried to persuade him to wait until morning and take the train from Blair were met with the response that he was "in a hurry," and he started out on his hike.

By some strange coincidence, and as apparent proof that he had the right tip this time, at least, an accident occurred to the motor engine and the train failed to run from Blair the next day. But he caught the northbound Tonopah and Goldfield train at Blair Junction the next morning, and that was the last ever seen of him in this section.

Some of his mining tools, his candle boxes, dinner bucket, telephone line, and the rake and broom with which he kept the "spirit walk" cleaned up, are still at the tunnel, where their presence is sacredly respected by all visitors.

redly respected by all visitors.

Just what this strange man's mission to Australia was has never been discovered, but it was the beginning of the exodus—Goldfield Tribune.

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION HAS EDUCATIONAL COURSE

It is not as well known as it might be that the Typographical union is interested in a trade educational project. A book just from the press tells us that nearly 1800 students are enrolled and that the lessons—which are given by correspondence—are sold below cost price. The union furnishes what in higher educational circles would be called an endowment by paying all advertising and promotional expenses and giving each person who finishes the course from $5 up. It is estimated that from $5000 to $10,000 a year is expended in this way by the Typographical union.

The booklet referred to contains testimonials from students of the course, and from the youth of 17 to the veteran of 64 they say the instruction given is of high value and well worth the time and money required. This is but one of the many projects sustained by the printers' union. It has spent a million dollars maintaining a home and tuberculosis sanatorium which is conceded to be in the front rank of world institutions for fighting the white plague. It has also a pension system for aged and infirm members which costs $200,000 a year. The minimum pension is $4 a week; in the larger cities this is supplemented by the local union so that in New York pensioners draw $8 a week and in Chicago $7.

PASS THE HAT, PLEASE

At Hazen Monday evening the westbound passenger from Wabuska took on two ministerial gentlemen, who, after making themselves comfortable in the sleeper, engaged in a conversation that was amusing and interesting, as well as edifying, to the writer, an unintentional listener, says the Mason Valley News.

The first words to attract attention was "John Wanamaker."

"We buy very little in Reno, as we find we can get greater satisfaction in dealing with John Wanamaker."

Wouldn't that make one sit up and take notice?

The speaker was a clergyman of Reno, well known and high up in church circles. He looked fat and sleek, as though he enjoys the liberal salary bestowed upon him by the people of Reno, and not by John Wanamaker.

Listen to the reply of the other, a well-groomed, well-fed gentleman of the cloth, occupying the highest position at the command of his church:

"My wife buys all her clothing from Wanamaker, tailor-made, and we find it much to our advantage to send away for such things."

Small wonder Reno business men cater to the divorcees from the east, else how shall they recover from the John Wanamakers the money sent to them by the salaried people of their city?

These divines preach "charity begins at home." The support of a local business establishment is the support of one's community home.

Pass the hat, please, while the choir sings "Wanamaker prepay the freight."

DOUGLAS, Ariz., Dec. 14—Jose Jimines, chief of the Pima Indian tribe, left here today to present an ultimatum to General Lorenzo, military commander at Sonora, demanding the restitution of Indian lands seven leagues square. He declares they were taken by force by Commissario Filipe Navarro, of the district of Sahuriha and given to others, notwithstanding the Indians have titles back to the Spanish occupation. Chief Jiminez says that when the Indians resisted they were jailed and fined. The lands include the famous ranches Carrico and El Commissario Campas. The tribe numbers 500, all armed. The ultimatum is important, as it means trouble along the Yaqui river if not complied with.

ST. MARK'S GUILD WILL SERVE TEA

The ladies of St. Mark's Guild will give a tea at the rectory, next door to the church, on Friday, Dec. 16, from 2 o'clock until 5. Light refreshments with a cup and saucer will be served. Fancy articles for sale.
